

HELLA among one of Forbes World's Best Employers 2020

Forbes 2020 employers rating recognizes quick reaction to coronavirus, continuous promotion of gender diversity, talent development and corporate social responsibility

Shanghai, 24 December 2020. The automotive lighting and electronics expert HELLA was recognized as one of the World's Best Employers 2020 by the international business magazine Forbes for its good working conditions. The ranking list, based on intense employee surveys, confirms that the automotive supplier promotes and supports talents and responds well to the COVID-19 pandemic.

"HELLA is a listed family owned international enterprise with a history of more than 120 years. Entrepreneurial responsibility marks the core of our company philosophy. We firmly believe the continuous success of the company is built on the dedication of our employees", says Priscilla Guan, Executive Vice President Human Resources Asia Pacific at HELLA. "We consider it our top priority to take good care of our employees and to be hold accountable for the community we serve. The recognition from Forbes further proves our commitment in this area."

For the World's Best Employers list, in June and July 2020 Forbes evaluated employers in different categories by surveying 160,000 full-time and part-time workers of different companies in around 58 countries worldwide. The categories include the participants' rating of their willingness to recommend their employer to others, their general satisfaction as well as the employers' reactions to COVID-19, gender equality, talent development and social responsibility. In total, HELLA ranked 284th out of the top 750 global companies.

HELLA will continue to optimize its Human Resources programmes to remain a modern and innovative employer of choice.
