

Vauxhall Adam - Service connections for air conditioning system | HELLA

Vauxhall

Adam

Model year: from 10/2012

Service connections for air conditioning system

During maintenance work on the vehicles listed above, the question "Where are the service connections?" arises.

The service connections (high and low pressure) are at the front right of the engine compartment, between the air filter housing and the headlamp.

In order to access the connections, the air intake pipe (Figure 1) must first be removed.

The connections will then be accessible (Figure 2).

Figure 1

Figure 2

Important safety note

The following technical information and tips for practical use have been set up by HELLA in order to offer professional support to automotive workshops in their daily work. The information available here on this website is only to be used by appropriately trained specialist staff.

The reprinting, distribution, reproduction, exploitation in any form and disclosure of the contents of this document, even in part, is prohibited without our express written approval and indication of the source. The schematic illustrations, figures and descriptions are for explanation and presentation of the document text and cannot be used as a basis for installation or design. All rights reserved.